

Round 1 – Initial Credit Report Dispute

How to Use this Template

Use this template for your first dispute when your Canadian credit report contains information you believe is inaccurate, incomplete, outdated, duplicated, or does not belong to you.

Before sending: replace all bracketed placeholders [] with your details, keep a copy for your records, and send by a method that provides proof of delivery (e.g., registered mail or a tracked courier). Canadian consumer reporting and collection agency laws are set primarily at the provincial/territorial level, so confirm the specific rules and timelines (often around 30 days for investigations) that apply where you live before relying on any deadline stated here.

Governing Canadian Laws & Regulators

- Provincial/Territorial Consumer Reporting Act (e.g., Ontario Consumer Reporting Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.33; British Columbia's Personal Information Protection Act also applies to credit reporting; Quebec's Act Respecting the Protection of Personal Information in the Private Sector and the Act respecting the protection of personal information in the private sector, as amended by Law 25) – sets out the consumer's right to dispute file contents and the agency's duty to reinvestigate, typically within 30 days.
- Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act (PIPEDA) – federal law giving individuals the right to access and request correction of personal information held by organizations, including credit bureaus, for matters not covered by substantially similar provincial legislation.
- Equifax Canada and TransUnion Canada each maintain internal dispute-resolution processes required under the above legislation; a refusal to correct can be escalated to the applicable provincial Information and Privacy Commissioner or the federal Office of the Privacy Commissioner of Canada (OPC).
